“Suzy Snowflake is sung” by Cheryl De Rosier.

“Doo-wop” refers to a style of music characterized by R&B vocal group harmony. This style evolved from African American groups that sang gospel in churches and on their way home would stop on street corners and sing their own tunes and lyrics, mostly songs about love and relationships. There would be 3 to 6 members and the music would consist of 3 to 5 part harmonies. Since they did not use instruments on these street corners, the songs were a capella, often using non-word syllables that imitated instruments and from which the name of the style is derived. When doo-wop was recorded, however, instruments were usually added for the recorded version. The style first appeared in the late 1930s and became increasingly popular in the following decades, culminating in the late 1950s when the performance of “Why do fools fall in love” by Frankie Lymon and

The Teenagers in the TV show hosted by Frankie Laine gave the genre its national dimension. After that, it became common to see doo-wop songs in the top 5... sometimes all of them. A sub-category of doo-woop is known as “kiddie doo-wop”, generally performed by groups composed of older members but with one teenager as the lead singer. “Racially integrated” groups followed, composed of black, white and Latinos and eventually all-white doo-wop groups also appeared, like The Diamonds. Rock bands with doo-wop songs included, for instance, The Beach Boys. In the 1960s, doo-wop continued to influence soul and rock groups. Between 1939 and 1964, it is estimated that some 30,000 doo-wop songs were recorded.
