James Elton Baker was born in 1913 in Zack, a small community in the Ozarks. He was the youngest of five children and was plagued with heart trouble most of his life. At the age of ten, he purchased his first guitar, a $4.95 instrument ordered through the mail. A short time later, he heard the records of Jimmie Rodgers and was so impressed that he learned to yodel. He reportedly learned breath control while swimming underwater for several minutes at a time, which enabled him to sustain his yodel for an unusually long time.

In 1930, Baker was asked to replace a friend in the Beverly Hill Billies, a popular group broadcasting in Los Angeles. Although he was only scheduled to stay in Los Angeles for six weeks, this step eventually took Britt from Hollywood to New York City and other places during his forty-two-year career.

In February 1934, he wed Margaret Scott, a fifteen-year-old who was killed in an accident 7 months later. In 1935, Britt married Jeannie Russell, a Canadian citizen who died two days after the birth of their second child in 1937. In 1942, he wed his third wife, Penny, a long-time fan and this marriage lasted until 1958, when the couple divorced. Finally, he married Janet Counts, a woman twenty-five years his junior, staying with her until 1970.

Britt made his first significant recording, “Chime Bells” with his brother Vernon. The piece showcased his trademark yodeling. From 1937 to 1956, he had several hit singles but his biggest hit by far was the patriotic wartime number, “There’s a Star Spangled Banner Waving Somewhere” (1942), with estimates of its sales ranging from one to four million.

His last major hit with a seven-minute yodeling song, “The Jimmie Rodgers Blues,” in 1968. In 1972, Britt suffered a heart attack while driving his car. He was buried in the Odd Fellows Cemetery in Broad Top, Pennsylvania.
